KEA AND STARLING ARE NOT WANTED

BOARD OF AGRICULTURE IS AFTER PROFESSOR BINGHAM AND HIS COLLECTING INDUSTRY.

The Board of Agriculture and Forestry yesterday afternoon decided to ask the Department of Agriculture to revoke the permit given to Professor Brigham of the Bishop Museum allowing him to import museum specimens, on account of his bringing a Kea, or sheep-killing bird here. The board does not accept the professor's idea that the bird lives only in icy mountain fastnesses and never attacks sheep at all.

A report was received from A. W. Carter and L. A. Thurston, setting forth the law on the subject, and recommending that the board ask for the revocation of Brigham's permit. The report was adopted and on motion of Holloway the board passed a resolution to ask for the appointment of a federal inspector, under the authority of the board, to watch such importations.

The Starling also came in for unfavorable criticism. A report from Professor Perkins, to whom was referred a proposal to import the Starling as an enemy to the Japanese beetle and other insects was as follows:

With regard to the letter of Mr. Munro referred to me to report on, concerning the introduction of the "British Starling" I may say that the introduction of this bird into the United States is absolutely prohibited. The bird in question is somewhat allied to the "minah" but in my opinion, in this country, if it should thrive, would be vastly superior to the latter. The reason why the starling is prohibited is clearly because it is partly frugivorous, being particularly fond of cherries and some varieties of pear (not alligator pears); but the majority of fruits it leaves alone. As it has the habit of digging into the soil after cutworms, etc., Mr. Munro is perfectly correct in saying it would be most beneficial against these and against Japanese beetle, the larvae of the latter being subterranean. I cannot remember, although I have dissected scores of these birds, ever seeing beneficial insects in the stomach of the starling, but with this or any other bird the fullest investigation on this point would have to be made before importation is effected, if it could be legalized.

The minah for instance, in certain localities, destroys thousands of the most beneficial insects we have, and if the starling or any other imported bird should do likewise, the damage done this way might far outweigh any advantage. All these points should be carefully considered and investigated here before any liberation of such birds is made. Yours obediently, R. C. L. PERKINS.

Forester Hosmer made a report of his investigation of the Waianae range and the Ewa basin, giving also the details of the work at the government nursery and the Nuuanu forest.

A letter was received from Jared G. Smith stating that the United States experiment station had leased five acres of land near Hilo for the purposes of a banana and cacao experiment. He desired the permission of the board to import cacao pods from Samoa for experimental purposes. Samoa was stated to be the nearest place from which the seeds could be imported and cacao trees in Ceylon, Trinidad and other places were affected with disease.

W. M. Giffard told of the results he had obtained from cacao seed, obtained from Samoa through Theodore Wores and planted eighteen months ago on Tantalus. The tree was covered with fungus which had stunted its life and it was very much wasted. He said that a mistake had been made by Smith, as there was really no regulation on the part of the board prohibiting the importation of seed from Samoa, Java being the place mentioned in the order.

Upon motion of Carter a permit was granted Smith to import the cacao seeds, provided that the proper precautionary measures were taken.

A letter was received from Costa Rica, containing a number of questions about the banana industry here and was referred to a committee for investigation. It contained the following inquiries:

1. Which of the islands of the group is best adapted to the cultivation of bananas?
2. What is the average value of the land, virgin soil?
3. What is the average rate of wages per man? What labor is it? Chinese, Japanese, coolie?
4. Is labor plentiful, or is there a scarcity for plantation work?
5. What are the facilities for transportation from the plantations to Honolulu?
6. What is the average freight rate per bunch of fruit from Honolulu to San Francisco?
7. What is the average weight of a bunch of bananas?
8. Can you kindly furnish me a rough analysis of the soil?
9. What height above the sea level are the best localities for bananas?
10. Is the climate malarial?
11. What is the average yearly rainfall?
12. Is there much swamp land in the islands?
13. What distance from Honolulu could land be obtained suitable for banana cultivation?
14. What land is offered for sale by the government, and what facilities and inducements are offered to prospective settlers?
15. In whose hands is the banana industry at present—squatters, small holders, or large plantations and syndicates. If the latter, I would like to know their names.
16. How many bananas were shipped from Honolulu in 1903?
17. Would the service of an expert banana planter, who had been a success in Jamaica and Central America be likely to command lucrative remuneration in Hawaii?

THE ADVANTAGES CEMENT ROOFING.

POSSESSES OVER

Tin, Iron and Steel Roofing

IT CANNOT RUST.

Gases, fumes, moisture, coal soot and smoke cannot injure or effect cement roofing.

It is better adapted for application over uneven surfaces, such as old shingles or metal roofs, obviating the expense of removing the same. It will not rattle from wind and storm, nor create any noise from rain falling upon it. The materials used in cement roofing are the best non-conductors of heat and cold known, therefore it will keep the building warmer in winter and cooler in summer than a metal roof.

Samples and full particulars mailed on request.
